10 reasons to come skiing this summer in Patagonia!

- 1. Max is your guide! His sense of adventure, knowledge of everything Patagonian, concern for safety and friends at every turn makes him your ticket to good times.
- 2. The snow is flying here when the rest of the world is sizzling. Patagonia's gauchos are calling for a snowy season in 2006!
- 3. The culture – it's Latin, it's European, it's South American, and it's a truly authentic ski town. There's an adventurous spirit, appreciation for the good life and a whole new world to discover. So much is going on!
- 4. The food and wine is out of this world, both in terms of flavours and price. From the legendary beef of Argentina and fondues that'll transport you to Tres Vallées, to rich and robust vino tintos, it's slope-side gourmet.
- 5. The nightlife – once you've recovered from your day on the slopes, enjoyed some après and sneaked in a siesta, it's time to hit the bars, live concerts and discos that keep the ski season pumpin' in Patagonia.
- 6. No crowds! Okay, so there are locals at the base, but once you get above mid-mountain, you'll feel like you've got all of Patagonia to yourself!
- 7. The scenery - we're talking ancient forests, deep fjords, wide open pampas, smoking volcanoes and gorgeous emerald lakes all within a short distance. On a sunny day you can see to the Pacific Ocean.
- 8. Full nature. South Americans aren't much for the backcountry, which leaves plenty of wide-open tree-skiing, empty gullies, long and cruising traverses and more for you and your friends.

9. Economical all-inclusive packages: transfers, meals, lift tickets, and a private guide means no worries – the only thing you’ve got to think about is your turns! Eight-day trips starting at US$2,200.

10. Your soul needs it!

It’s simple. If you’ve ever thought of taking the ski trip of a lifetime to Patagonia, drop us a line and we’ll chat! Contact us at info@patagoniatravelco.com
